WinfrGUI is a simple yet powerful command-line file recovery utility. It is able to recover a variety of file system types, including NTFS, FAT, and exFAT. From the perspective of file recovery, WFR is an application that was developed to allow Windows administrators to recover lost or deleted files. It is best known for its ability to recover files from deleted or formatted partitions and removable drives. Most of the time, the drive is lost when there are still some files on it, so the program is usually used by backup or PC repair experts. What makes WinfrGUI stand out from its bigger brother is its graphical user interface (GUI). Its UI is quite simple and clean, emulating a command line window. You can check it out below: Recovery Mode Once you have the drive selected in the drop-down menu, the three most important features for recovery, Quick Scan or Deep Scan, and Output Folder, are the one that will set this up. If you need to change the drive for which you'll be scanning, you can check the drop-down menu and select it. Custom options Anytime you are going to perform a recovery, you should first customize the settings for the scan. WFR was never made to analyze drives that haven't been formatted in a while, so if you want to make sure you're getting the best results from the scan, you have to adjust its performance. To do that, you just need to input values for the starting sectors, the cluster size, and the total number of sectors. There are many things that this scan can do, and you can change them to get the best results. Like the name suggests, deep scans are much more powerful than quick scans, but they are harder to set up. Supported Formats The engine of WinfrGUI is written in C/C++, and it supports Linux, Windows, and macOS. Recovering files from NTFS, FAT, and exFAT is a breeze. ReFS, however, needs more work. As for Windows itself, WinfrGUI is able to open drive partitions that were formatted in MBR or GPT. Finally, be aware that the program may not be compatible with NTFS, GPT, and FAT16 or FAT32, so you should choose wisely what you want to recover.
