Youth Homelessness: New Federal Funding Provides Hope In the face of rising youth homelessness, the federal government announced today that it will provide a boost to local efforts. In response to recommendations from the President’s Commission on the Workforce, Education, and Opportunity, the U.S. Department of Labor today issued a Notice of Funding Opportunity to provide a $19 million demonstration grant to fund innovative and locally responsive youth-specific services addressing the unique needs of homeless youth. In the notice, the Department of Labor notes that “youth homelessness is the result of a complex mix of individual, family and societal issues. According to one estimate, as many as one in five youth experience homelessness at some point in their lives.” The department emphasized that “[w]ith regard to homeless youth in particular, there is an urgent need for evidence-based programs that address the primary needs of homeless youth.” In a May 2015 study, “Children Living in Emergency Homelessness,” the National Center for Homeless Education found that in 2013, it is estimated that there were nearly 60,000 homeless youth under the age of 25, a fourfold increase since 2006. Youth under the age of 18 in emergency shelters accounted for nearly 30 percent of the overall youth homeless population. Youth under the age of 17 and 18 years old made up the vast majority of the youth homeless population in California, Washington and Oregon. While the emergency shelters offer a temporary solution for youth that need urgent care services, there is a severe lack of similar programs that provide a long-term solution. Through this grant program, the Department of Labor hopes to make grants to local agencies in every state that is home to one of a number of federally-recognized homeless youth “county-based joint coalitions” (CBJCs). CBJCs are groups of homeless service providers, community leaders and others who are working to reduce youth homelessness at a community-wide level. CBJCs represent a significant number of the homeless youth population, with an estimated 11,000 homeless youth accessing services through the coalition in 2014. The nine CBJCs chosen to receive funding – Atlanta, Chicago, Houston, Seattle, King County, Colorado, Los Angeles, New York City, and San Francisco – are representative of the types bff6bb2d33
